Periogen Presented Globally

Results of two independent clinical studies of Periogen were presented at the prestigious FDI World Dental Congress 2015, September 22-25, Bangkok, Thailand. This international platform offered the opportunity to have our product and the technology behind it critically discussed and validated within the dental scientific community. Both research presentations were well received and we look forward to new friends and partners as a result.

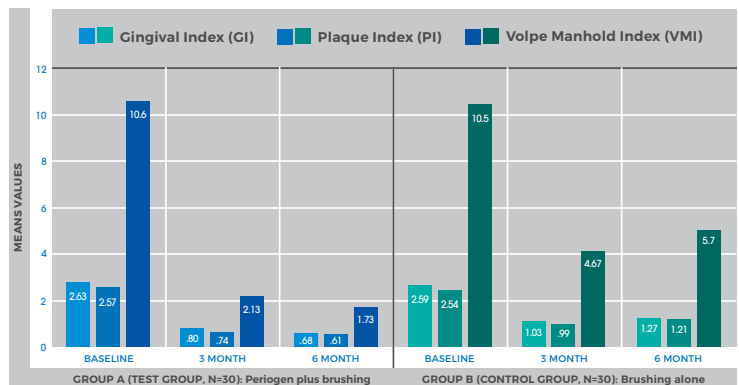

RESULTS ARE IN...

Periogen was the subject of two recently completed studies in the U.S. (University of Nevada, Las Vegas) and in India (PIMS University).

Researchers tested the effectiveness of Periogen in addressing periodontal diseases with a focus on calculus/tartar control. Results of the Pune study confirmed that Periogen provides a statistically significant reduction in calculus formation in subjects with a moderate rate of such formation. Periogen was clinically proven to prevent tartar/calculus build-up 45% more effectively than brushing with toothpaste alone. Similarly, results of the UNLV study confirmed that after 90 days, reduction of plaque index, bleeding upon probing, and periodontal pocket depth were more significant in participants using Periogen than in those who were not. ORAL HEALTH & SYSTEMIC HEALTH

The link between periodontal disease and systemic diseases has been scientifically established over the last two decades. Association of periodontal infection with organ systems like cardiovascular, endocrine, reproductive, and respiratory makes periodontal infection a complex, multiphase disease. Optimal oral health is related to better systemic health. This is where Periogen comes in. Periogen helps reduce plaque and tartar buildup between professional dental visits so your oral health is maintained at a healthy level throughout the year, not just immediately following your dental exam.
